

MURDER WILL OUT

A Maryland Young Murderer Gives Himself Up to the Helena Police Authorities.

He is Driven to It by Remorse of Conscience for Having Killed a Friend.

Story of the Crime Told by McGeady—He Says He Was Blind Drunk When He Did the Deed.

John McGeady is in the city jail a confessed murderer. He is a fugitive from justice and is wanted in Cumberland county, Maryland, for the killing of Barney Creagan, who was shot by McGeady the night of February 16, 1888. McGeady was not captured, remorse of conscience compelling him to surrender to the authorities.

Yesterday morning about 10 o'clock McGeady went to the city hall and asked for Marshal Hard. The marshal was not present, and the man told officer Kuntz, who was on duty, that he had something private to communicate, and he was taken into Judge Sanders' room, where he told his story, Mr. Kuntz making memoranda of the conversation. When the story was finished Judge Sanders came in and McGeady was asked to repeat to the magistrate what he had said and did so.

The history of the crime and the murderer's wanderings since are meagre, the man claiming to have been out of his mind at the time of the shooting and on several occasions since then. He said that he was engaged in the coal mines of Midland, Cumberland county, Md., and he was his custom to go to the home of his parents, about three miles from town, Saturday evenings and spend Sunday with them. Saturday, Feb. 16, was pay day at the mines and he was around town collecting some bills. The kept him until late and having to walk to his father's after dark he placed a pistol in his pocket for protection. While making his collections he visited a number of saloons, drank frequently and became excited. He was walking along a railroad track. He had a confused notion that he had hurt somebody and must get away. Boarding a train at a station named Baring he went to Wheeling, W. Va., and while there read in the Wheeling Register an account of the killing of Barney Creagan by himself that he was wanted for the crime and that the officers were on his trail. McGeady says he immediately fled and has been wandering ever since, getting farther and farther from the scene, going under several aliases. He stopped while at Columbus, Ohio, and from there went direct to Denver, Colorado, where he resumed his own name and went to work for the motor railway company. From Denver he went to Park City, thence to Ogden, from Ogden to Butte, and from Butte to Helena.

When asked when he arrived in Helena, McGeady replied that he came in Friday night and stopped at the Walla Walla. He had fully determined to give himself up and relieve the terrible strain upon his conscience which had tortured him night and day, allowing him no rest. He had killed his friend. He did not know why, and never would, but he was ready and willing to suffer the penalty, whatever it was.

McGeady when relating his story was nervous and spoke in a rapid but coherent manner. The officers did not know whether the man was telling the truth or not. He might be a lunatic or he might be some one seeking transportation, but it was decided to hold him until the story could be disproved or verified, and he was placed in jail. While there Detective Walters was sent for and interviewed the man. He was satisfied that his story was correct, as he had been on the lookout for him for a month, having received a circular offering a reward and giving a description of McGeady. The description fitted to a tally, but the cut does not resemble McGeady at all.

But still further evidence was wanted and Sheriff Hobling, of Cumberland, was telegraphed. A reply was received stating that McGeady was wanted and to hold him until an officer arrived. He also asked to be notified whether McGeady would come on without a requisition, which he promises to do. The sheriff was so notified and will be here as soon as the trip can be made.

McGeady is a young man about 25 years of age and is dressed neatly in a spring suit, wears a fancy necktie and a derby hat. He is married and at his request telegrams were sent his wife and mother informing them of his whereabouts.

The Secret of Success, "Enterprise is the secret of success," said Mr. Fowles, pointing to a swarm of stylish ladies giving orders for hats and bonnets. "Our fashionable ladies used to send their money east for their millinery, but I believe in keeping the money at home, so went to New York city and employed a No. 1 milliner, and then have first class goods shipped every week, so my stock is kept nice and fresh with all the latest novelties as fast as they appear in the market, and the result is what you see, these same ladies here buying the goods that they used to send east for. And they are only too glad to avail themselves of the privilege of getting New York bonnets at home." "If" thought the reporter to himself, "enterprise is the secret of success, Fowles' Cash store is the coming house of the new state of Montana and no mistake." A PLEASANT DRIVE. The Attractions of Montana Avenue—A Thoroughfare Twelve Miles Long.

There are many in our city who delight in a drive or a horse back ride in the "faded heat of the day," who are not, perhaps, aware that the finest drive in the city is out Montana avenue. This is without doubt Helena's best street, stretching as it does from foot hills to foot hills, being over twelve miles long and eighty feet wide, the most pleasant portion of this drive is north of the Northern Pacific. One can go down Warren, Ewing or Rodney streets to Helena avenue and thence down this avenue to the Montana Central crossing, and then turn north into Montana avenue.

One will at once be struck with the remarkable progress that is being made in this portion of the city. New houses are being built in all directions. But perhaps the most remarkable improvements are being made in the Flower Garden addition. Some thirty or forty new buildings can be counted in this addition alone. Prominent among these buildings which are situated to the right of one going north, is the new home of the division superintendent of the Northern Pacific, and the Northern Pacific office building. On the left, in the Grand avenue addition, a number of very beautiful residences have been erected in the past year. These are supplied with water, have telephone connection with the business portion of town, a street railway assured, which makes this a most desirable place for homes. Lying just north of the Flower Garden addition is the Hershfield addition. This is a beautiful knoll sloping gradually toward either boundary, the streets marked out and posted at each corner, giving the names of streets. Two new houses have been commenced this week in this addition, which has only been on the market one week. The beautiful location of the ground makes this a very attractive place to homesteaders. Opposite the Hershfield addition lies the Richmond Hill addition and next on the right are the Catholic College grounds, consisting of about 130 acres of beautiful ground. The valley to right and left from this point on is dotted with the homes of ranchmen, and it is said that the new Methodist college will be located several miles out on this avenue. Altogether there is no drive in the city more pleasant.
